WEATHER

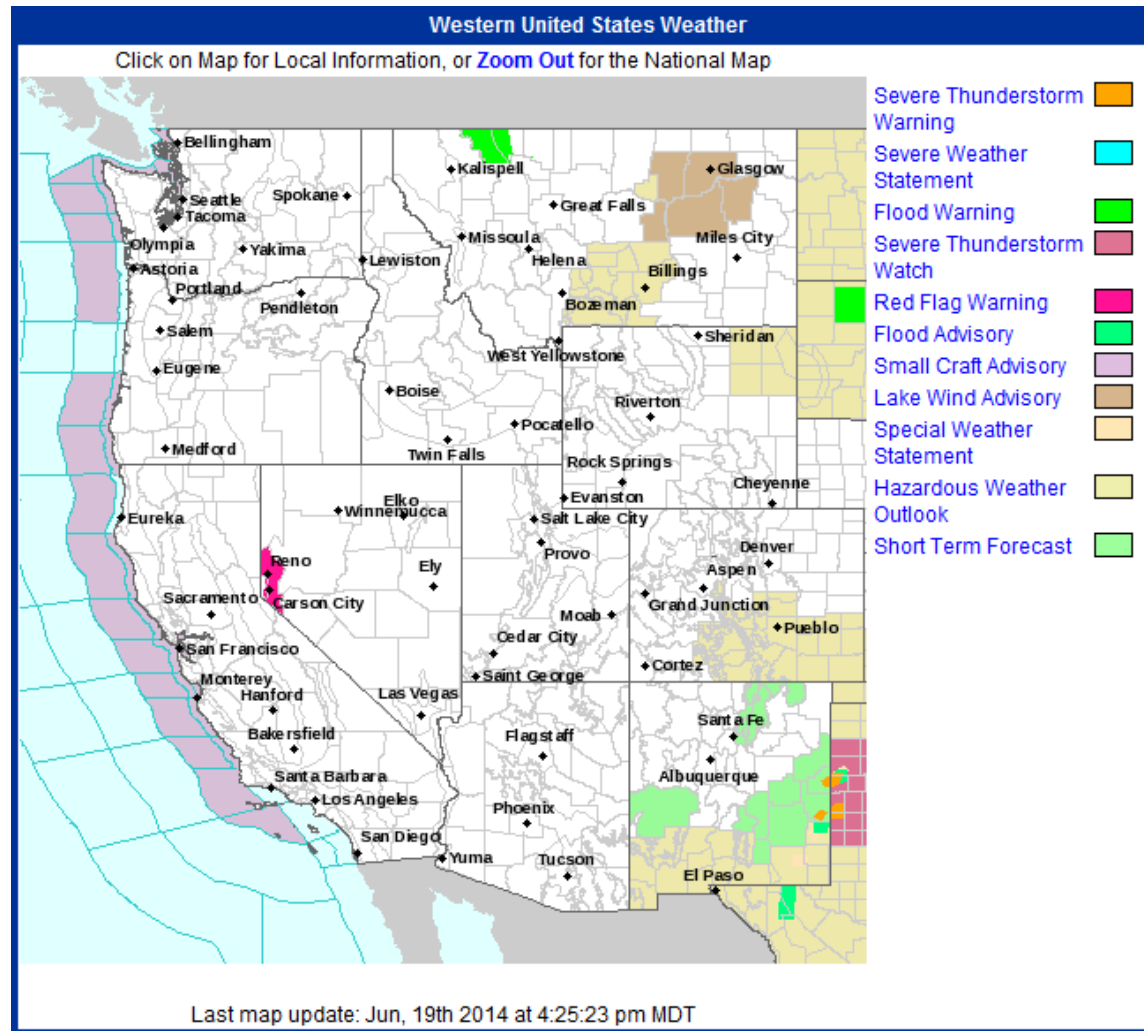

Northern California

Northern California will remain under a southwest to west flow aloft for much of then next week. A high pressure ridge is broad and oriented west-east, but remains strongest well to the Southwest to Southeast of Northern California. The air mass should remain generally stable and dry enough to preclude any thunderstorm chances through at least Sunday. Minimum afternoon humidity inland will continue to dip into a 7-17% range, with mid to higher terrain in the south half of the area seeing just poor to mediocre overnight relative humidity recovery. Wind-wise, northwest to northeast breezes in Northern California will stay on the light side and confined to morning hours over the next several days. Afternoon winds will range from south to west across the area, being mainly light in the Sacramento drainage. But there will be sizeable areas receiving moderate southwest to west afternoon winds from the Cascade and Sierras eastward these next several days.

Southern California

High pressure will build into the region during the next couple of days resulting in warmer and drier weather across the inland areas through Friday. Daytime highs will be in the upper 80s and into the 90s across the inland valleys, and relative humidity will fall into the single digits and teens away from the coast, with poor overnight recovery in the mountain areas. Winds will generally be southwest to northwest 5 to 15 mph across the region today and Friday, except in the deserts where winds will be locally stronger during the afternoon hours. The marine layer is less than 1,500 feet deep this morning and it will likely remain shallow through the weekend with low clouds and fog restricted to the immediate coast. Temperatures may lower by a few degrees over the inland areas on Saturday, but the overall weather conditions will change little throughout the district this weekend. Humidity values will continue to drop into the single digits and teens away from the coast with poor recovery at night, especially over portions of the Los Padres National Forest and over the Sierras. Moderate onshore flow will help to generate gusty winds during the afternoon hours through the desert passes and along the central coast through Monday. High pressure will build into the southern half of the state by early next week with above normal temperatures expected over all of the inland areas by then.

Cal EOC Incident – 2014 Drought

Situational Summary

On January 17, 2014 Governor Edmund G. Brown proclaimed a State of Emergency and directed state officials to take all necessary actions to prepare for drought conditions. The State Operation Center (SOC) is activated to implement objectives in support of the Governor's priorities. The lack of winter rain and snowfall has resulted in extremely dry conditions in many parts of the State. Reservoir levels are down significantly from where they should be on average for this time of year. If conditions continue without substantial rainfall, severe impacts to municipal water supplies, agriculture (plants and livestock) and firefighting capabilities are likely in store for the State over the next few months. Negative economic impacts will also result.

*As our state's rainy season comes to an end, it is highly unlikely that precipitation totals will increase significantly. This winter's below average rain and snowfall worsens conditions in this third straight dry year.

The drought could result in severe impacts to the municipal water supplies, wells, agriculture (plants and livestock) and firefighting capabilities for several months. The SOC continues to be activated to monitor the situation statewide, and support regional and local operational areas.

- The Taskforce continues to meet regularly to take actions that conserve water and coordinate state response to the drought.
- The final manual snowpack survey of the season was conducted on Thursday (May 1) and showed California snowpack at 18% of normal.
- DWR has announced that water essential for health and safety will be delivered through the state water project. The current State Water Project Allocation is 5%.
- Cal OES continues to gather drought-related costs from state agencies and local governments.
